It is with great pleasure that we announce the eagerly awaited return of the National DVM Intern Conference (NDIC), a flagship event organized by the Chittagong Veterinary and Animal Sciences University (CVASU). Since its inception in 2016, this conference has gained remarkable attention within our young researcher community of different veterinary schools of Bangladesh. This year, on November 23, 2023, we will come together for the fifth instance of NDIC.

This day-long event promises a variety of stimulating activities that will engage and inspire all attendees. The activities include insightful keynote presentation, oral and poster presentations and interactive question and answer sessions followed by a thought-provoking panel discussion. Furthermore, we are delighted to announce provisions for awards across various sections, aimed at honoring outstanding performers.

Moreover, we are privileged to host iconic figures and renowned scientists in the field of veterinary science, who will share their invaluable experiences. Their presence promises to broaden our horizons. In light of this, we are asking for abstracts under following disciplines:

Animal production research: Intern research of current semester/ year on animal management and nutrition or any other relevant areas.

Clinical research: Intern research of current semester/ year on animal disease and treatment or any other relevant areas.

GENERAL INSTRUCTION

1. Only the intern students of current session are eligible for abstract submission.
2. Prior submitting, the intern student must ensure that his/ her supervisor is aware of its contents.
3. Submitted abstract(s) should include data from own intern research and it should be unpublished and or not presented in any other conferences.
4. If selected, the inter student himself/ herself have to present the research in person in the conference.
5. The conference committee will decide whether the selected research will be presented orally or in a poster presentation.
